FAQ's & Useful Information

Brought to you by:

Why does my water smell like rotten eggs?

The combined presence of hydrogen, sulfur, & bacteria cause foul smelling water. The magnesium anode rod installed in the water heater tank protects the tank surface but generates enough hydrogen to create an odor when it interacts with sulfur in the water or bacteria in the tank.

What can we do to fix this problem?

Replacing the magnesium anode rod with an aluminum anode rod may minimize the problem. The most efficient method of eliminating the hydrogen sulfide odor is to control the bacteria. As a rule, the chlorination of public water supplies kills the bacteria, but in some well private well systems may need to be purified by the use of chlorine injectors or ultra violet light. This will eliminate the presence of bacteria.
